

INTRO: welcome Back everyone to (the Dream show) I'm your host (name) and I'm here with my homies (rest of names) and today we have an interesting and important topic and that is - - THE AMERICAN DREAM, let's get right into it (theme song) We asked a couple of Americans from different ages about their opinion and definition of the American dream, recorded the interviews, and gained new views and advice about the American Dream, in this podcast we care going to investigate the way people look at the American Dream, and how people of all ages think if they have reached it yet.(Scott Holmes Uplifting music)

(collin interview)

Paulose:The American Dream is defined as “the idea that any American, with enough resolve and determination, can climb the economic ladder, regardless of where he starts in life.” In our interviews we noticed that interviewees of younger age didn't believe that they had reached the American Dream yet because they didn't have enough time but most adults did. we asked why most people thought the American Dream was dead, and while hearing our interviews. We saw that the American Dream takes time and isn't something that happens overnight which makes some people doubt in it.One of the people we interviewed pointed out that we should be patient while trying to achieve the American dream and that patience is a big part of achieving it.

Kevin: The elder interviewed men had interesting responses about the American dream, one of them had a simpler point of view (money interview clip) (living interview clip) and had hope for the future generations (interview clip), the elderly people were happy with what they had accomplished even though they had not yet fully achieved their dream, some dreams are more complex than the ones of the younger people interviewed (interview clip).

Collin: Although the American dream can seem like it has only one definition, the American Dream can differ for many people. For some it means just getting money and nice things.(pauloses interview) But for others it can mean the opportunity to become successful and pursue what you wish. The American dream is really open to anybody and everybody willing to put hard work and effort. That is why we are interviewing other to see what they think about the American Dream.

Isaiah: The American Dream might seem impossible but today I will show you how it is not. The American Dream is about the drive and support and individual has when they are younger from their parents, family friends, etc. It might take hard work and dedication but anyone can achieve their dream as I realized once I asked around and interviewed people "insert interview".

Conclusion

In conclusion what we gathered from all the interviews and articles was how the American dream has many definitions for people of all ages and races. But the one thing that stayed in common was to become successful in America and become someone important. We wanted to know why this was the common ground for everyone, and we figured out that this view has been passed down from generation and has stuck with us. We also concluded that most people are optimistic about the American dream and believe it is achievable. Even teens our age are hopeful about the American dream and believe that they're headed in the right direction to achieving it. That's all for today guys, What do u think about the American dream? Do you think it's achievable ?(Uplifting instrumental)

Credits: Thanks to Paulose, Kevin, Collin, and Isaiah for creating this podcast.